

Solar and wind now account for 35% of global electricity generation [1], but here's the kicker: intermittency issues still cause 17% of renewable energy to go unused during peak production ...

